Question #11

This retroactive registration is being filed as of February 15, 2006, the date on which, to the best of Monitor's knowledge, it undertook registrable activities that were later reflected in the July 3, 2006, agreement filed with this registration. Over the eventual course of its work, Monitor's activities with respect to Libya sought to take advantage of a period of improved diplomatic relations and included the following: Monitor contacted and invited prominent international leaders, including in the United States, to visit Libya for meetings with officials of the government of Libya. Monitor created education and information programs about the United States political system. Monitor identified leading figures in the government, media, and academic communities, including in the United States. Monitor supported and conducted public relations on behalf of Libya, including distribution of materials in the United States and support of a public relations firm's outreach to journalists in the United States. Monitor's review of its activities in Libya is ongoing, and it will supplement this description as appropriate in a subsequent, supplemental disclosure statement.
